Frequently Asked Questions

What is a Trekkers' Recovery Massage in Kathmandu?

A Trekkers' Recovery Massage is a specialized therapy designed to relieve fatigue, muscle soreness, and joint pain after (or before for preparation) trekking or outdoor adventures. This massage combines techniques from Swedish, deep tissue, and traditional therapeutic massages to help your body recover faster.

How does a Trekkers' Holiday Massage help after trekking in Nepal?

The Trekkers' Holiday/Recovery massage targets tight muscles, stiff joints, and knots caused by trekking. It improves blood circulation, reduces inflammation, eases soreness in calves, thighs, back, and shoulders, and promotes faster physical recovery so you can enjoy your trekking journey more comfortably.

Who can benefit from a trekking recovery massage?

Hikers, mountaineers, and travelers exploring the trails around Kathmandu, Pokhara, or the popular trekking destinations like Everest, Langtang, Manaslu, or Annapurna region etc. can benefit. Even first-time trekkers can use this massage to prevent post-trek fatigue and soreness.

How long is a typical trekking recovery massage session?

Sessions usually last between 1.5 to 2 hours, depending on your needs and the intensity of the trekking activity. Your therapist will personalize the massage to focus on the areas that need the most attention.

What techniques are used in a Trekkers' Holiday Massage?

The therapy combines Swedish massage, deep tissue massage, acupressure, and stretching techniques to loosen tight muscles, improve mobility, and accelerate recovery from trekking-related stress.

Can a trekking recovery massage help with joint pain or injuries?

Yes, the massage is designed to target common trekking injuries such as ankle sprains, knee pain, frozen shoulders, and lower back stiffness. It helps reduce pain and promotes natural healing.

How often should I get a trekking recovery massage during a trekking trip?

It depends on the length and intensity of your trek. For multi-day treks, a post-trek massage after every 2-3 days can be highly beneficial. For shorter treks, a session at the end of the trek is usually sufficient.

Is a trekking recovery massage suitable for all fitness levels?

Absolutely. The massage can be adapted for beginners, intermediate hikers, or professional mountaineers. Therapists adjust pressure and techniques to suit your comfort and recovery needs.

Where can I get the best trekking recovery massage in Kathmandu?

The Institute of Natural Medicine in Thamel offers expert trekking recovery massage services in a serene and natural environment, combining therapeutic techniques to ensure full-body rejuvenation.

How should I prepare for a trekking recovery massage?

Arrive 15 minutes early for a short consultation. Wear comfortable clothing and inform your therapist about any injuries, soreness, or medical conditions so the massage can be tailored for maximum benefits.

Can this massage improve my energy and performance for the next trekking day?

Yes, by reducing muscle stiffness, improving blood circulation, and releasing tension, a trekking recovery massage helps restore energy levels and enhances physical performance for subsequent trekking days.

What is the difference between a Trekkers' Holiday Massage and a regular massage?

A Trekkers' Holiday or Recovery Massage is specifically designed for post-trek recovery, focusing on muscles and joints stressed during trekking. Regular massages may provide relaxation but may not address trekking-specific muscle fatigue and joint pain effectively.

Is it safe to get a trekking recovery massage if I have minor injuries?

Yes, but always inform your therapist about any injuries. Experienced therapists at the Institute of Natural Medicine can adjust techniques to ensure the massage is safe while still promoting healing.

How much does a trekking recovery massage cost in Kathmandu?

Prices vary depending on session length and type. At the Institute of Natural Medicine, 1.5 to 2-hour sessions are competitively priced while offering professional therapeutic benefits, making it an affordable choice for trekkers.

Can a trekking recovery massage be combined with other therapies?

Yes, it can be combined with Ayurvedic Massage, Swedish Massage, or Reiki Healing for enhanced relaxation, muscle recovery, and overall wellness.
